

The best of two schools

TODAY, 4 November 2009

Opportunities for students to expand their networks across countries and industries; and a chance to learn more about the dynamics and trajectory of contemporary developments.

These are among the things that students can expect from the new NTU-Warwick Double Masters Programme, launched yesterday. The programme will capitalise on the strengths of the S Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) at the Nanyang Technological University, and the Department of Politics and International Studies (PAIS) at the United Kingdom' University of Warwick to address the importance of multiple and cross-disciplinary approaches to global issues.

Mr Zainul Abidin Rasheed, Senior Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, said the degree represents another important milestone, not only in NTU' pursuit of educational excellence, but also in Singapore' goal of partnering with world-class universities.
