No. 194

Jemaah Islamiyah: Of Kin and Kind

Sulastri Osman

S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies
Singapore

22 March 2010
The S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS) was established in January 2007 as an autonomous School within the Nanyang Technological University. RSIS’ mission is to be a leading research and graduate teaching institution in strategic and international affairs in the Asia-Pacific. To accomplish this mission, RSIS will:

- Provide a rigorous professional graduate education in international affairs with a strong practical and area emphasis
- Conduct policy-relevant research in national security, defence and strategic studies, diplomacy and international relations
- Collaborate with like-minded schools of international affairs to form a global network of excellence

Graduate Training in International Affairs

RSIS offers an exacting graduate education in international affairs, taught by an international faculty of leading thinkers and practitioners. The teaching programme consists of the Master of Science (MSc) degrees in Strategic Studies, International Relations, International Political Economy and Asian Studies as well as The Nanyang MBA (International Studies) offered jointly with the Nanyang Business School. The graduate teaching is distinguished by their focus on the Asia-Pacific region, the professional practice of international affairs and the cultivation of academic depth. Over 150 students, the majority from abroad, are enrolled with the School. A small and select Ph.D. programme caters to students whose interests match those of specific faculty members.

Research

Research at RSIS is conducted by five constituent Institutes and Centres: the Institute of Defence and Strategic Studies (IDSS), the International Centre for Political Violence and Terrorism Research (ICPVTR), the Centre of Excellence for National Security (CENS), the Centre for Non-Traditional Security (NTS) Studies, and the Temasek Foundation Centre for Trade and Negotiations (TFCTN). The focus of research is on issues relating to the security and stability of the Asia-Pacific region and their implications for Singapore and other countries in the region. The School has three professorships that bring distinguished scholars and practitioners to teach and do research at the School. They are the S. Rajaratnam Professorship in Strategic Studies, the Ngee Ann Kongsi Professorship in International Relations, and the NTUC Professorship in International Economic Relations.

International Collaboration

Collaboration with other Professional Schools of international affairs to form a global network of excellence is a RSIS priority. RSIS will initiate links with other like-minded schools so as to enrich its research and teaching activities as well as adopt the best practices of successful schools.
ABSTRACT

Convicted terrorists from Jemaah Islamiyah (JI) have attested to using the Internet in one way or another during their operations, from sending messages to one another to looking for extremist fatwas online to justify their actions. That said, one would however be hard pressed to prove the primacy of the Internet in their step up to violence. More often than not, more traditional elements remain the key to individual religious radicalization and political violence in Southeast Asia — blood relations and marriage ties. This paper revisits these kinship linkages as well as quasi-kinship ones that include teacher-disciple bonds and the wider fraternity of ikhwan-ship (brotherhood) with particular regard to JI. Keeping counterterrorism efforts in context is important or else governments could run the risk of carelessly appropriating vital resources on less immediate concerns.

Sulastri Osman is a Research Analyst attached to the Centre of Excellence for National Security at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies. She is also a graduate student at the School. Her research focus is on religious radicalisation, Islamist militancy and political violence in Indonesia.
Introduction: Prioritizing concerns

There has been much media attention accorded to the rise of lone-wolf Islamist terrorists whose journeys towards religious radicalization and political violence were enabled and facilitated through their consumption of extremist materials especially prevalent on the Internet. Youths and young adults alienated from mainstream society, as the argument largely goes, then gravitate towards one another online and form virtual extremist communities whose ideology helps make sense of their personal grievances and whose cause resonates so much with them that they become willing to engage in violence.¹

The premise, in all honesty, is open to debate for it brings to question, among other things, notions of independent will and personal accountability when it comes to the individual’s decision to turn violent as well as the exercise of rights (and limits) of freedom of expression in cyberspace. Also, deciding which websites and what kinds of content are “extremist” is a sufficiently subjective affair, varying from country to country and from one individual to another. Further, devising ways of measuring increasing levels of radicalization and attributing that increase to having been exposed to extremist materials on the Internet is an entirely different issue altogether.

But this is not what this paper is about. Regardless whether the premise can be supported or refuted, and while convicted terrorists in this part of the world have attested to utilizing the Internet in some ways during their operations, one would be hard pressed to prove the primacy of the Internet in their step up to violence. More often than not, more traditional elements remain the key to individual religious radicalization and political violence in Southeast Asia—blood relations and marriage ties. This paper revisits these kinship linkages as well as quasi-kinship ones that include teacher-disciple bonds and the wider fraternity of īkhwan-ship (brotherhood) with particular regard to JI. This could be yet another write-up to add to the ever-expanding repertoire of literature on terrorism today but hopefully this paper adds some value to the existing body of works because of its primary research component. And as part of policy suggestion, this paper emphasizes the importance of keeping counterterrorism efforts in context or else governments could run the risk of carelessly appropriating vital counterterrorism resources on less immediate concerns.

¹ For instance, see Bruce Hoffman, “The Use of the Internet by Islamic Terrorists”, Gabriel Weimann’s “Online Terrorists Prey on the Vulnerable” and Daveed Gartenstein-Ross’ “The Problem of the Lone Wolf Terrorist”. The author has also in fact jointly written a piece on Internet radicalization; see RSIS-ASPI joint report on “Countering Internet radicalization in Southeast Asia”.

But first off, it is important to recognize what JI really is as an organization. How did JI come about and how has it evolved into what it is today? And considering what it is today — a greatly fragmented, highly decentralized entity with very fluid membership — how relevant is it to regard JI an organization at all? And if that is the case, what does combating a “non-organization” then mean for counterterrorism for this region?

JI: In context and as is

JI is a clandestine Islamist group with roots deep in the Darul Islam movement of the fifties, an episode in history that has had crucial repercussions for Muslim politics in Indonesia many years down the road. It is, therefore, important to understand Darul Islam to in turn understand JI.

Studying the Darul Islam movement has twin benefits for all students in the terrorism field even remotely interested in looking at Indonesia. For one, its history allows a proper understanding of not just how and why JI came about but also a glimpse of a highly probable future pathway of the group. Two, it helps situate JI within the larger context of identity politics in Indonesia, a Muslim-dominated country with a long history of having Islam appear in various shapes and forms in the public sphere. Religion has at numerous junctures in Indonesia’s history—when fighting the Dutch, at independence and during subsequent phases of nation building—provided a significant, convenient and resounding rallying point around which to mobilize the masses. The politicization of Islam in Indonesia is as “normal” as identity politics gets and it is not at all uncommon for religious identities in contemporary societies to be politicized considering the ever-increasing reach of the state in various aspects of modern day-to-day life. For Indonesia, it is however forlorn that violent religious groups operating in the fringes of society hog the world’s attention, effectively eclipsing the much larger dynamics at play.

The Darul Islam movement was not a particularly religious one to begin with.² It came about largely because local militias who had helped the indigenous authority fight off the colonialists were unhappy over the way the new government went about administrating the then freshly minted independent state. Feeling short-changed for having to disband but without receiving what they perceived would be an appropriate share of the resources at the state’s disposal, Islam provided the leaders of the movement a common ground for mobilization. What began in 1948 as separate rebellions breaking out in different parts of the country, Darul Islam fought for an Islamic alternative to a secular statehood. Over the years, the movement gave rise to, among other things, a home-grown concept of jihadism and offshoots and splinter groups the likes of Komando Jihad and JI alongside numerous other non-violent ones that all revolve around the want for the establishment of an Islamic state.

Darul Islam, its religious ideology seeped in militancy and its great tales of fearless warriors who would fight against all odds, has proven extremely enduring through the trials of time. Prominent members of the movement continue to be the stuff of legend and a tireless source of inspiration for the jihadists of today.³ The movement has also shown a tremendous ability to survive. It has faced brutal military crackdown during Suharto’s New Order regime; it has also gone through numerous intra-group rivalries, split factions, mergers and reconciliations over and above an assortment of splinter groups of different political configurations with different leaders at the helms, all in all demonstrating a kind of dexterity the movement has to not merely adapt but, more importantly, remain appealing through different periods of Indonesian history.

But in being so fluid, the Darul Islam of today with its many manifestations is not like the Darul Islam of past. With nascent beginnings as a coherent organization of networks, Darul Islam has transformed into a network of individuals who forge alliances based on close and very personal ties.

³ For example, individuals like Musa Warman whose “achievements” included organizing fa’i raids to obtain fund and weapons could very well be controversial but their stories live on; see ICG Report No. 92: “Recycling militants in Indonesia”.

And in very similar fashion, this is what JI is today.

JI was formally inducted in 1993 after friction within Darul Islam resulted in the late Abdullah Sungkar leaving to form a split faction. Conceived from the outset as a military outfit with its own charter, operational guidelines and strategic programmes, as evident from its so-called manifesto called Pedoman Umum Perjuangan al-Jama’ah al-Islamiyah (General Guide for the Struggle of al-Jama’ah al-Islamiyah, or better known by its Indonesian acronym, PUPJI), JI started out as an organization highly centralized and well-structured. Management was very apparently top-down with a clear hierarchical order; the group operated on various markaziyah, mantiqi and wakalah levels that spanned the region, each with its own spheres of influence and responsibilities.

But after the September 11 attacks, and particularly so after the first Bali bombings, known and suspected members of JI were relentlessly pursued in massive crackdowns across Southeast Asia, leaving many observers to posit that the group has been dismantled and reduced to nothing more than a mere shell of its former self. The formation of the elite Indonesian counterterrorism force Detachment 88, fine police work and high-level regional cooperation have led to either the capture or death of the group’s most notorious members like Riduan Isamuddin a.k.a. Hambali, the Bali bombers and their accomplices, and bomb expert, Azahari Husin.

Yet despite such heavy setbacks, JI continues to be credited for a string of high-profile terrorist attacks across Indonesia over the next years, including the (first) J.W.

---

6 This is how JI has been widely described in the media and by various terrorism analysts since the arrest and prosecution of the Bali bombers. For an example among many, see Joshua Kurlantzick, “A radical solution: Using former terrorists to turn around militants in the making is showing remarkable success”, Los Angeles Times, 6 January 2008; available at http://articles.latimes.com/2008/jan/06/opinion/op-kurlantzick6 (page last accessed 21 February 2010).
Marriott Hotel bombing of 2003, the Australian embassy bombing of 2004, and the (second) Bali bombings of 2005. Through attacks on what are regarded symbols of a corrupt, capitalist West encroachment and moral decadence—luxury hotels and bars and pubs—JI seems set on course to establish a pan-Islamic state by way of violence and fear.

But speaking of the JI today as if it were an organizationally cohesive entity, something one could understandably expect any fringe group to be, is yet misinformed and lacks appreciation of its extremely amorphous nature. For one, the violent elements are truly the fringe of a fringe. The Bali bombings of 2002, for instance, caused major internal debates within the group, some of which played out publicly in the media. Even firebrand Indonesian cleric, Abu Bakar Ba’asyir, widely tagged one of the founders of JI, registered his lack of concurrence with the way the Bali trio had chosen to carry out their act of jihad\(^7\) as well as expressed sympathy for those who were killed in the suicide bombings.\(^8\)

Further, an even closer examination of JI’s violent sliver reveals that they hardly share ideological unity of strategic means even if they do so in goal, as will be evident later in the paper in the case of Ali Imron who is currently in detention for his involvement in the terrorist attack in Bali. So while these individuals shore up an Islamist ideology fixated on installing the laws of syariah in the public domain largely by picking up arms, they believe in greatly divergent ways of doing so. Different JI militants wage categorically different “jihad”—some wage a global one where the entire world is a justifiable battlefield while others would only fight in localized conflicts where other Muslims are involved—and this has significant bearings on how they conceptualize what makes a legitimate fight and which operations they ultimately participate in.\(^9\)

Also, while some choose to keep their allegiance out of open scrutiny to remain underground and confine themselves to their small exclusivist communities, some others go public with their commitment to above-board assemblages the likes of Majlis Mujahidin Indonesia (MMI) and Jamaah Anshorut Tauhid (JAT) led by Abu Jibril and Ba’asyir respectively. Regardless of their associations, or none, they have all nevertheless been linked back to JI.

\(^9\) Sulastri Osman, working MSc thesis.

The messiness of the configuration is further compounded by repeated denials of alleged group members that JI exists at all. Ba’asyir has time and again rebuffed the existence of such an organization, instead crediting its invention to the enemies of Islam — among others, the CIA — who seek to tarnish the good name of the religion and its followers in order to justify repressive actions against them. Also, while Ali Imron has indeed claimed to be part of a ‘jemaah Islamiyah’, he meant the term in its most generic application, regarding himself as being in the one congregation of Islam and altogether denying it being an exclusive organization. Coining an outfit made synonymous with terrorism with an all-encompassing moniker that can literally be as expansive as to include the entire Islamic community renders the attempt to delineate an actual organization not merely a tedious task but a politically thorny one too in Muslim-dominated Indonesia. This only further muddies the conceptualizing of a JI organization.

The (non-)organization that is JI

What makes JI, or who is part of JI, are often posed questions. But perhaps what’s more important to ask is how relevant is the concept of a JI organization when its reported members seem to hardly recognize one?

The need for a clearly bounded group no doubt makes it easier for law enforcers and policymakers alike to set their sights and course of action against a particular target, to easier identify irrefutable members, to calculate group strength, and to basically imagine the enemy.

---

But when interviewed during a series of fieldwork in Indonesia last year, a number of convicted Islamist militants who have been variously charged with terrorist activities by the Indonesian government hardly spoke of a JI organization. Some in fact claimed to only know of JI when they read of themselves or their compatriots in the news. Many were more content to speak of their roles in operations as individuals, or at most, their roles in relation to their immediate network of compatriots.

Sonhadi, for instance, the current leader of the Ba’asyir-led JAT in East Java who had served time for helping the late terrorist fugitive Noordin Top when the latter was on the run, kept reiterating that he had acted not in the name of an entity called JI but out of a personal duty to a fellow Muslim who had a run-in with the law and was trying to evade authorities. Sonhadi, unaware of Top’s true identity then, had only needed to know that the police were after Top for having done something the latter believed to be for the sake of Islam.\(^\text{12}\)

And for Yusuf, a militant who once trained under Nasir Abas in Mindanao and was later arrested in Semarang for possession of illegal arms, what was real for him was not as much the group as the cause and the fellow militants he had fought alongside in southern Philippines. He did not find himself in a medan jihad (jihad battlefield) because he had sworn an oath of allegiance to a group of elders—he never did—but because he was committed to helping his Muslim brothers he believed were under prosecution. Further, Yusuf claimed that his loyalty to the cause and to his comrades was only applicable to the battlefield in Mindanao and no more, highlighting a lack of consistent positive self-identification to the group.\(^\text{13}\)

JI, it seems, cannot be sufficiently understood in terms of any standard organization because, as Sonhadi and Yusuf go to show, those who have been associated with JI do not exactly view themselves as members of such a grouping. It is true that the elders did at the start put in order a kind of group arrangement that can only be considered a networked form of organization with different cells operating at different levels which left members largely unaware of others beyond their own jurisdictions; but that was more the result of intentional, masterful planning than inadvertent internal \(^{12}\) Interview, 17 June 2009.

\(^{13}\) Interview, 14 March 2009.
fragmentation. Today, JI arguably neither has easily identifiable members united in means and goals nor a structured system with a discernible hierarchical order.

Nevertheless, there is a sort of organizational arrangement among its known members and it is one largely based on kinship and quasi-kinship linkages. Kinship ties include blood and marriage relations;\textsuperscript{14} quasi-kinship ones include bonds between extremist religious teachers and their students which should not be underestimated because they are not unlike a familial one wherein the latter’s loyalty and obedience to the former is paramount. On top of that, relations also extend into the realm of fictive kinship where everyone is an \textit{ikhwan}.\textsuperscript{15}

The following sections examine the various kinship and quasi-kinship linkages evident among known JI terrorist militants.

\textbf{A family affair: Kinships in JI}

JI is made up of a complex web of familial relationships and marriage ties. An inherent sense of belonging being part of a family forges bonds among its members that are imaginably stronger than most other kinds of social organizations can foster. Further, keeping activities, especially those of the illegal kind, within the family helps keep clandestine operations safe from infiltration because only the close, familiar and trusted find themselves invited to partake in them. Loyalty is therefore almost always assured because the individual’s allegiance is not simply to just any collective given that turning against each other necessarily means turning against the people closest to them.

For the most part, families can be expected to provide the unconditional support and protection needed by terrorist militants when they involve themselves in high-risk activities.

\textsuperscript{14} The examining of kinship ties within JI is not unprecedented; among the most notable works are investigative pieces by Noor Huda Ismail, Sidney Jones and the ICG, and Sally White.

\textsuperscript{15} Marc Sageman, in \textit{Understanding Terror Networks} (2004), noted the significance of closed societies in facilitating a “bunch of guys” in the West to turn to violence; and based on the research, in a New Yorker piece by Raffi Khatchadourian, Sageman described emotional attachment to group members, perceived social benefits of remaining in the group and “one-upmanship” as part of the radicalization process towards violence. Also, Scott Atran, based on psychological studies, highlighted the institutional factor behind the organizing of fictive kin to help explain suicide terrorism behaviour in the Middle East and beyond: see “Genesis of Suicide Terrorism”, Science Review Vol. 299. endeavours. There have been numerous instances of family members of terrorist militants willingly putting themselves at risk in order to keep their renegade kin safe, whether it is by way of giving refuge, withholding information from the authorities or simply banding together as the examples to follow show.

Blood relations

The October 2002 Bali bombings saw a family of brothers pooling strength. Ali Ghufron, a.k.a. Mukhlas, and Amrozi, both executed in November 2008 for the attack, were brothers. Ali Imron, brother number three, is currently serving a life sentence in a Jakarta detention centre for his role in the same operation. The significance of blood relations is especially telling in this particular case of terrorism because Imron, by his own admission, had always felt that bombing Bali was the wrong way of going about the struggle for Islam even if he did play a central role in the planning of the attack. He had been the one who surveyed the sites and identified the bomb targets as well as drove the explosive-laden van to position it nearer to the attack location because the suicide bomber did not know how to drive. Imron recalls having advised Mukhlas, the master planner and financier, on several occasions against carrying on with the operation but Imron nevertheless continued with his assigned duties because Mukhlas was, after all, still his brother.16

Also keeping it together is Farihin Ahmad and his family. Three generations of Islamist militants run in the family.17 Farihin claims during an interview that his father and grandfather waged armed jihad against the governing authorities of their times. His father, Ahmad Kandai, a member of Darul Islam, was in fact involved in the 1957 plot to assassinate then-president Sukarno, whereas his uncle, Nasir, had worked closely with both Abdullah Sungkar and Abu Bakar Ba’asyir in the 1980s and 1990s. Following in family tradition, Farihin and his third brother, Mohammed Islam, had travelled to Poso to join in the violent clashes against the Christians there at the height of communal violence in Central Sulawesi. Farihin was also involved in the bomb

---

16 Interview, 17 April 2009.
17 Many of those involved in JI today have had relatives involved in the Darul Islam movement of yesteryears. For further understanding of JI’s history, see Greg Fealy, “Half a century of violent jihad in Indonesia: a historical and ideological comparison of Darul Islam and Jemaah Islamiah”, in Vicziany and Wright-Neville (eds.), Islamic terrorism in Indonesia: Myths and realities, Series: Annual Indonesia Lecture, no. 26 (Monash Asia Institute) 2005.
attack against the Philippine ambassador in Jakarta in 2000 together with his other brother, Abdul Jabar. Youngest brother, Solahudin, was involved in a series of bombings in Indonesia, including the bombing of the Atrium shopping mall in 2001. The fact that all of the brothers have accordingly served time in prison for their various actions has not deterred Farihin from preaching to his own children the necessity of armed jihad. Farihin hopes his children, including his daughters, will follow his footsteps and continue to fight for the cause the way he and his family have.\(^\text{18}\)

And in last year’s terrorist attack in Jakarta, family ties among the perpetrators were similarly evident. Syaifudin Zuhri Djaelani, the recruiter of the suicide bombers who blew themselves up in the twin luxury hotel attacks in July 2009, had his brother, Mohamed Syahir, as his closest aide. Together they assumed various identities as they travelled to different Indonesian cities recruiting new potentials into their fold up until they were shot to death during a police raid on their safe house in Tangerang in October. The manhunt could perhaps have ended earlier if not for Fajar Firdaus, a psychology graduate from a local university, who helped rent the safe house for them. He was their nephew.

\textit{Marriage ties}

Kinships within JI are further extended through marriage ties. The director of the Institute of International Peace Building in Jakarta, Noor Huda Ismail, who counts a good number of the terrorist militants his friends having gone to school with some of them, explained that JI elders would play matchmaker to the younger ones by fixing them up with their sisters, daughters or other female relatives, or those of their peers.\(^\text{19}\) According to Noor Huda, “once inside these [extremist] groups, individuals cement their mutual bonds by marrying the sisters and daughters of other members.

\(^{18}\) Interview, 15 March 2009

Therefore, it is difficult for an individual to move away from the groups without betraying their closest friends and family.\textsuperscript{20}

Such arranged marriages, like the strategic union between Mukhlas, the Afghan veteran from East Java who would later become the mastermind behind the Bali bombings, and Paridah Abas, the daughter from a family of jihadists based in Malaysia, for instance, help to expand the network in a most secure way. With this particular nuptial agreement, close associates of both Sungkar and Ba’asyir from Indonesia and neighbouring Malaysia effectively become one familial unit. The Abas family, like Mukhlas’ own, has its own share of Islamist militants: Nasir Abas, Paridah’s brother who is also an Afghan veteran, trained militants from a base camp in Mindanao while other brother Hashim Abas was reportedly involved in a bomb plot in Singapore.\textsuperscript{21}

Another such marital pact highlights the JI tactic of matrimonial mergers for protection. Ari Aryani, wife number three of Noordin Top, the now-dead terrorist fugitive suspected to be the mastermind behind the Jakarta twin hotel bombings, is the daughter of one of Top’s close associates, Bahrudin Latif. A police raid on Bahrudin’s house in light of the July bombings led to the discovery of explosives buried in the backyard. Bahrudin, who was arrested later in December 2009, was the head of the Al-Muaddib pesantren in Cilacap and is suspected of helping to hide Top from the authorities to the extent of providing him a whole new identity as his daughter’s husband.\textsuperscript{22} According to local press reports, it was apparent that Bahrudin did not disclose to his daughter her husband’s real identity when he arranged for them to be married; she had only known Top as a particular Abdul Halim.\textsuperscript{23} Top’s previous two wives, one in Riau and one in Surabaya, were also reported to have been related to and have had their marriages arranged by the relatives of his previous accomplices. That said, Top’s wives are however not necessarily mere victims of their fathers’ or their other male relatives’ jihadist cause because, as Sally White points out, independent agency should never be overlooked as reality on the ground is usually far more complex than how the media chooses to portray such women.

Expanding the concept: Quasi-kinships in JI

Blood and marriage are not the only kinds of binding kin ties among JI members. While being genealogically related of course matters in kinship, notions of relatedness are just as significant in bringing together a group of people who think, feel and act alike. However, when speaking of a sense of perceived relatedness among a collective, there is a danger of clumsy categorizing because everyone can essentially relate to one another on many different levels and have social relationships with one another as, among other things, friends, neighbours, classmates or colleagues. That said, relatedness when it comes to JI is rather closely associated to actual kinships in terms of name and function, something which helps to further buttress the in-group understanding of an “us” versus “them”.

Discipleship

A form of relationship evident in JI that is not so dissimilar from an authoritative father figure is one held by charismatic religious elders. These include figures like the guru ngaji (Quran recital teacher) and traditional medicinal men who might not have formal education but who, having usually committed the Quran and Hadith to memory, garner much respect. The great significance of these religious elders in many Muslim societies across Indonesia, though not a novel observation, has however not been much appreciated as a form of kinship whose bonds are just as strong as any blood or marriage ties. Religious elders, who by their own accords take it as their amanah (trusteeship) to educate those in their charge about Islam and Islamic ways of living, are on the flipside often entrusted with the religious education of the children; and with religion being an all-encompassing force in everyday life, they essentially have far-reaching influence over most aspect of day-to-day life. 28 So in their roles as educators and healers, spiritual or otherwise, it is not uncommon that they in effect come to be regarded as extensions of the heads of household.

---

27 In applying social psychologist Geert Hofstede’s work on culture to his Radical Pathways Framework, which helps explain why individuals turn to violence, Kumar Ramakrishna in his book Radical Pathways (2009) highlights a pattern of strong dependence on group elders in collectivist, large power-distant groups much like JI as well as showcases how teachers actively shape the intellectual futures of children in such groups.

Even in a time of advanced communications technology and the democratization of ways to attain religious knowledge with the mass print media and the Internet, the sway of such religious elders has not been significantly undermined. The centrality of religious figures—extremist ones in this particular case—in various militant and terrorist operations in Indonesia showcases the lasting influence of charismatic individuals over their disciples. Samudra, the Bali bomber whose real name was Abdul Aziz, had deliberately chosen to attach the title of imam to his name, no doubt to create the impression that he possessed legitimate religious authority for his actions. He is said to have used the dubious appellation of religious leader especially after he participated in a series of bomb attacks in Batam in 2000. 29 Similarly, Syaifudin Zuhri, the patient recruiter of suicide bombers, was reported in the local press to have assumed the role of an ustadz as well as an ahli bekam (traditional medicinal cupping practitioner) as he worked to get closer to his potential targets in the lead up to the July 2009 twin hotel bombings in Jakarta. 30 Both the suicide bombers involved in the attacks had been his students.

---

28 The importance of religious elders in Indonesian Muslim communities is very evident in numerous chapters throughout Greg Fealy and Sally White (Eds.), Expressing Islam: Religious Life and Politics in Indonesia (Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore), 2008.

Fraternity of ikhwan

Members of JI subscribe to living by Islamic laws and principles in small groups of usroh, a term that literally means family but is meant in practice to be understood as the foundations for building up an Islamic society.\textsuperscript{31} In such an usroh, every man within the network is an ikhwan (“brother” in Arabic), highlighting the perceived kindred relations among members of the group. Indonesians in general do refer to one another using similarly familial references like bapak (father) and ibu (mother), so the fact that JI members call one another a brother equivalent is nothing much remarkable in itself. That said, the adoption of an Arabic term to showcase a sense of camaraderie among them is nevertheless a deliberate exercise to show solidarity and set themselves quite apart from the other Muslims in Indonesia. Further, this greatly-limited brotherhood becomes reinforced by the amalgamation of their unique in-group language and appearances. The jihadists pepper their everyday communications with Arabic, possess their own group speak, spot beards and don “jihadist” garbs that usually consist of a baggy top and a matching pair of pants that ends above the ankles, calculated to create a very visibly exclusivist identity for themselves.

This assumed fraternity often means fluid memberships despite personal differences in opinions or preferred leadership styles. Many who subscribe to the same jihadist ideology identify with one another and some will cooperate in operations if called upon regardless if they belong to different circles.\textsuperscript{32}

Kinship and quasi-kinship ties and their significance for counterterrorism

Pointing out kinship linkages within JI is not unprecedented; the significance of kinship in JI has been well documented. Familial relationships among the perpetrators of terrorist acts are, in fact, oftentimes rather quickly discernible with some probing. What this paper seeks to do is emphasize the importance of understanding and appreciating these familial ties, regardless if they are real or imagined, amidst anxious \textsuperscript{31} This is based on a concept developed by Hasan al-Banna of the Egyptian Muslim Brotherhood, a group JI has found inspiration in. A translation of al-Banna’s writings (in Malay) published by Dewan Pustaka Fajar can be accessed from \url{http://www.muslimdiary.com/downloads/usrah_dan_dawah-Hasan%20al-Banna.pdf}.

\textsuperscript{32} As noted in ICG Report No. 92: “Recycling militants in Indonesia”.
talk of “self-radicalization” and lone-wolf terrorists in Southeast Asia. There is no doubt some logic in connecting the dots between extremist ideology derived from reading extremist books or downloading extremist materials from the Internet and violent terrorist acts—but actually proving the causal relationship is another matter altogether.

Traditional and direct real-time relationships seem to remain the foremost influencing factor when it comes to religious radicalization and extremist violence among JI members. Kinship and quasi-kinship networks tied together by blood, marriage, discipleship and fraternity seem to supersede personal impulses of the individual lone wolf when it comes to carrying out a terrorist operation. Evidently, a reliable support network made up of familiar faces and trusted individuals are prerequisites.

But of course, it is obvious that not every kin, or quasi-kin, belonging to the same familial unit as a known terrorist militant is also a violent extremist, even a potential one. Despite the present chosen focus on kinship, there should be no misunderstanding that all related individuals are necessarily guilty by association, or that they should be assumed to be so. Indeed, the authorities should as much as possible steer clear of jumping the gun because excessive harassment from law enforcers, whether real or perceived, could likely result in defensive reactions and only serve to harden those who could already be hesitant to inform on family members or turn away those who sympathize with the terrorist militant. Good police work is therefore crucial in such cases, as is sound intelligence.

And intelligence is definitely key when it comes to identifying suspected members of a terrorist network without creating much political ruckus, especially so in multi-cultural, multi-religious societies like Singapore. The central issue that should accordingly feature at the forefront of efforts to identify suspected terrorists is the question of threat: what’s more imminent, the extremist ideology or the violent extremist? The problem for the authorities always lies in recognizing whom to target, the person who espouses extremist views or specifically those who actually engage in violent acts? Because is it not the former that is the pre-cursor to the latter? But who can really say that a particular individual’s extremist views would beyond doubt manifest in violence? And if that is the case—which it is not—does it mean that in addition to nabbing the violent individual, extremist literature in all its myriad forms made available from all possible sources, including the Internet, has to be plugged too? Who decides what constitutes “extremist”? These are tricky questions.

Countering terrorists, at least for law enforcers, should be everything about stopping extremist acts of violence since that is well within the jurisdiction of the police and less about curbing extremist ideas which is more a whole-of-society concern, especially that of the wider Muslim community—but this is, however, an issue that can only be sufficiently addressed in an entirely new paper. The point here is that it is important to keep counterterrorism efforts in context or else run the risk of appropriating vital resources to less pertinent endeavours. “Self-radicalization” and lone-wolf terrorists, at least for now and at least for this region, remain less the worry than individuals with actual real-life connections to known violent extremists.

It is difficult policing violent extremists and those suspected of being involved with them, especially in light of the potential for political fallout. A delicate carrot-and-stick balance between punishment and rehabilitation has to be struck when dealing with those captured because on one hand, justice has to be perceived to be served in the eyes of those adversely affected by terrorism. And on the other hand, the judgements passed onto the terrorist militants have to be similarly recognized by their immediate families as appropriately “fair enough” for the crimes committed. This tacit acknowledgement by the kin is crucial; families could otherwise continue to harbour deep-seated resentment towards the governing authorities for what they perceive to be unjust treatment towards their “kind”, bitterness that could be passed from one generation to the next. Psychoanalyst Vamik Volkan, in a research piece on identity and collective trauma in Cyprus, noted how groups who have been systematically discriminated against or victimized in wars or war-like conditions by the (usually larger) oppressive enemy group tend to feel a sense of shame and humiliation as well as guilt for surviving an ordeal others they knew died in; and the lack of ability or opportunity for them to adequately come to terms with such sentiments result in the trans-generational transmission of trauma. Carrying the same emotional burden, the younger generations, to varying degrees, then attempt to continue the efforts of their parents to reverse the humiliation and complete the mourning. Likewise, the current “war-like” situation between JI members and governing authorities serve to reinforce perceptions of outright discrimination and victimization among jihadists and their families, a kind of humiliation the younger generations seek to rectify with some seeing political violence as a way to contribute to the unfinished tasks of their predecessors. There are numerous examples of this to go by. Like the case of Farihin’s family goes to show, many of today’s JI members in Indonesia have fathers, grandfathers and other relatives who were once part of the anti-government Darul Islam movement of the 50s.

---

The Indonesian police, taking the lead from its elite counterterrorism force Detachment 88, seem to have taken away lessons from this. Accordingly, families of captured or killed JI terrorist militants often receive assistance from the governing authorities. In part to help keep the affected families on their feet especially if the captured or killed was a breadwinner, and in part to show that they have not been ostracized or discriminated against for the actions of one member, the police recognize that kin have an impact on the overall success of their counterterrorism efforts. By demonstrating to such families through aid, financial or otherwise, that the government and its apparatus are really not their enemy, it helps reduce possible resentment for the authorities to a low, ultimately stifling the flames that could fan a new generation of violent extremists.

Singapore has also established similar practices, highlighting how integral garnering support from kin is to the effective stemming of extremism in future generations. The Religious Rehabilitation Group (RRG), made up of independent religious scholars and counsellors, was set up in 2003 with the specific aim of countering the ideology of JI. Today, it not merely counsels and rehabilitates those detained for being involved with the group but the wives and children of the detainees too, well in recognition of the tendency for extremist ideologies to play out in vicious cycles within the family. Among other things, the RRG counsellors visit the families at their homes, offer financial support and upgrading courses and extend educational assistance for the children so that they can better cope with the detention of one of their own, emotionally, socially and economically.34

Effective counterterrorism, among other things, means being fully aware of the significance of kinship and quasi-kinship ties among JI members. Of course, not everyone who can be possibly linked to the group is necessarily a violent extremist. But for the few who decide to partake in terrorist acts, they turn to their kin, real or imagined, for support, protection and refuge. Law enforcers should therefore similarly engage the kin to prevent them from doing exactly that.

34 For further information on the RRG, see its official website http://www.rrg.sg/. The counter-ideological work of the RRG has been variously described as a success but, as Kumar Ramakrishna in a critique of the approach puts it, the programme’s full potential has yet to be realized; see “A Holistic Critique of Singapore’s Counter-Ideological Program”, CTC Sentinel Vol. 2 Issue 1, January 2009.
1. Vietnam-China Relations Since The End of The Cold War
   Ang Cheng Guan (1998)

   Desmond Ball (1999)

3. Reordering Asia: “Cooperative Security” or Concert of Powers?
   Amitav Acharya (1999)

4. The South China Sea Dispute re-visited
   Ang Cheng Guan (1999)

   Joseph Liow Chin Yong (1999)

6. ‘Humanitarian Intervention in Kosovo’ as Justified, Executed and Mediated by NATO: Strategic Lessons for Singapore
   Kumar Ramakrishna (2000)

7. Taiwan’s Future: Mongolia or Tibet?
   Chien-peng (C.P.) Chung (2001)

8. Asia-Pacific Diplomacies: Reading Discontinuity in Late-Modern Diplomatic Practice
   Tan See Seng (2001)

9. Framing “South Asia”: Whose Imagined Region?
   Sinderpal Singh (2001)

10. Explaining Indonesia's Relations with Singapore During the New Order Period: The Case of Regime Maintenance and Foreign Policy
    Terence Lee Chek Liang (2001)

11. Human Security: Discourse, Statecraft, Emancipation
    Tan See Seng (2001)

    Nguyen Phuong Binh (2001)

13. Framework for Autonomy in Southeast Asia’s Plural Societies
    Miriam Coronel Ferrer (2001)

    Ananda Rajah (2001)

15. Natural Resources Management and Environmental Security in Southeast Asia: Case Study of Clean Water Supplies in Singapore
    Kog Yue Choong (2001)

16. Crisis and Transformation: ASEAN in the New Era
    Etel Solingen (2001)

17. Human Security: East Versus West?
    Amitav Acharya (2001)

18. Asian Developing Countries and the Next Round of WTO Negotiations
    Barry Desker (2001)
19. Multilateralism, Neo-liberalism and Security in Asia: The Role of the Asia Pacific Economic Co-operation Forum
   Ian Taylor (2001)

20. Humanitarian Intervention and Peacekeeping as Issues for Asia-Pacific Security
   Derek McDougall (2001)

21. Comprehensive Security: The South Asian Case
   S.D. Muni (2002)

   You Ji (2002)

23. The Concept of Security Before and After September 11
   a. The Contested Concept of Security
      Steve Smith (2002)
   b. Security and Security Studies After September 11: Some Preliminary Reflections
      Amitav Acharya (2002)

24. Democratisation In South Korea And Taiwan: The Effect Of Social Division On Inter-Korean and Cross-Strait Relations

25. Understanding Financial Globalisation
   Andrew Walter (2002)

26. 911, American Praetorian Unilateralism and the Impact on State-Society Relations in Southeast Asia
   Kumar Ramakrishna (2002)

27. Great Power Politics in Contemporary East Asia: Negotiating Multipolarity or Hegemony?
    Tan See Seng (2002)

28. What Fear Hath Wrought: Missile Hysteria and The Writing of “America”
    Tan See Seng (2002)

29. International Responses to Terrorism: The Limits and Possibilities of Legal Control of Terrorism by Regional Arrangement with Particular Reference to ASEAN
    Ong Yen Nee (2002)

30. Reconceptualizing the PLA Navy in Post – Mao China: Functions, Warfare, Arms, and Organization
    Nan Li (2002)

    Helen E S Nesadurai (2002)

32. 11 September and China: Opportunities, Challenges, and Warfighting
    Nan Li (2002)

33. Islam and Society in Southeast Asia after September 11
    Barry Desker (2002)

34. Hegemonic Constraints: The Implications of September 11 For American Power
    Evelyn Goh (2002)

35. Not Yet All Aboard…But Already All At Sea Over Container Security Initiative
    Irvin Lim (2002)
36. Financial Liberalization and Prudential Regulation in East Asia: Still Perverse?
Andrew Walter
(2002)

37. Indonesia and The Washington Consensus
Premjith Sadasivan
(2002)

38. The Political Economy of FDI Location: Why Don’t Political Checks and Balances and Treaty Constraints Matter?
Andrew Walter
(2002)

39. The Securitization of Transnational Crime in ASEAN
Ralf Emmers
(2002)

40. Liquidity Support and The Financial Crisis: The Indonesian Experience
J Soedradjad Djiwandono
(2002)

41. A UK Perspective on Defence Equipment Acquisition
David Kirkpatrick
(2003)

42. Regionalisation of Peace in Asia: Experiences and Prospects of ASEAN, ARF and UN Partnership
Mely C. Anthony
(2003)

43. The WTO In 2003: Structural Shifts, State-Of-Play And Prospects For The Doha Round
Razeen Sally
(2003)

44. Seeking Security In The Dragon’s Shadow: China and Southeast Asia In The Emerging Asian Order
Amitav Acharya
(2003)

45. Deconstructing Political Islam In Malaysia: UMNO’S Response To PAS’ Religio-Political Dialectic
Joseph Liow
(2003)

46. The War On Terror And The Future of Indonesian Democracy
Tatik S. Hafidz
(2003)

47. Examining The Role of Foreign Assistance in Security Sector Reforms: The Indonesian Case
Eduardo Lachica
(2003)

48. Sovereignty and The Politics of Identity in International Relations
Adrian Kuah
(2003)

49. Deconstructing Jihad; Southeast Asia Contexts
Patricia Martinez
(2003)

50. The Correlates of Nationalism in Beijing Public Opinion
Alastair Iain Johnston
(2003)

51. In Search of Suitable Positions’ in the Asia Pacific: Negotiating the US-China Relationship and Regional Security
Evelyn Goh
(2003)

52. American Unilaterism, Foreign Economic Policy and the ‘Securitisation’ of Globalisation
Richard Higgott
(2003)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No.</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>54.</td>
<td>Revisiting Responses To Power Preponderance: Going Beyond The Balancing-Bandwagoning Dichotomy</td>
<td>Chong Ja Ian</td>
<td>2003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>55.</td>
<td>Pre-emption and Prevention: An Ethical and Legal Critique of the Bush Doctrine and Anticipatory Use of Force In Defence of the State</td>
<td>Malcolm Brailey</td>
<td>2003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>56.</td>
<td>The Indo-Chinese Enlargement of ASEAN: Implications for Regional Economic Integration</td>
<td>Helen E S Nesadurai</td>
<td>2003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>57.</td>
<td>The Advent of a New Way of War: Theory and Practice of Effects Based Operation</td>
<td>Joshua Ho</td>
<td>2003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>59.</td>
<td>Force Modernisation Trends in Southeast Asia</td>
<td>Andrew Tan</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>60.</td>
<td>Testing Alternative Responses to Power Preponderance: Buffering, Binding, Bonding and Beleaguering in the Real World</td>
<td>Chong Ja Ian</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>63.</td>
<td>Outlook for Malaysia’s 11th General Election</td>
<td>Joseph Liow</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>64.</td>
<td>Not Many Jobs Take a Whole Army: Special Operations Forces and The Revolution in Military Affairs.</td>
<td>Malcolm Brailey</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65.</td>
<td>Technological Globalisation and Regional Security in East Asia</td>
<td>J.D. Kenneth Boutin</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>66.</td>
<td>UAVs/UCAVS – Missions, Challenges, and Strategic Implications for Small and Medium Powers</td>
<td>Manjeet Singh Pardesi</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>67.</td>
<td>Singapore’s Reaction to Rising China: Deep Engagement and Strategic Adjustment</td>
<td>Evelyn Goh</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>68.</td>
<td>The Shifting Of Maritime Power And The Implications For Maritime Security In East Asia</td>
<td>Joshua Ho</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>No.</td>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Author(s)</td>
<td>Year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----</td>
<td>-----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>----------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>70</td>
<td>Examining the Defence Industrialization-Economic Growth Relationship: The Case of Singapore</td>
<td>Adrian Kuah and Bernard Loo</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>71</td>
<td>“Constructing” The Jemaah Islamiyah Terrorist: A Preliminary Inquiry</td>
<td>Kumar Ramakrishna</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>72</td>
<td>Malaysia and The United States: Rejecting Dominance, Embracing Engagement</td>
<td>Helen E S Nesadurai</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>73</td>
<td>The Indonesian Military as a Professional Organization: Criteria and Ramifications for Reform</td>
<td>John Bradford</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>74</td>
<td>Martime Terrorism in Southeast Asia: A Risk Assessment</td>
<td>Catherine Zara Raymond</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>75</td>
<td>Southeast Asian Maritime Security In The Age Of Terror: Threats, Opportunity, And Charting The Course Forward</td>
<td>John Bradford</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>76</td>
<td>Deducing India’s Grand Strategy of Regional Hegemony from Historical and Conceptual Perspectives</td>
<td>Manjeet Singh Pardesi</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>77</td>
<td>Towards Better Peace Processes: A Comparative Study of Attempts to Broker Peace with MNLF and GAM</td>
<td>S P Harish</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>78</td>
<td>Multilateralism, Sovereignty and Normative Change in World Politics</td>
<td>Amitav Acharya</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>79</td>
<td>The State and Religious Institutions in Muslim Societies</td>
<td>Riaz Hassan</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80</td>
<td>On Being Religious: Patterns of Religious Commitment in Muslim Societies</td>
<td>Riaz Hassan</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>81</td>
<td>The Security of Regional Sea Lanes</td>
<td>Joshua Ho</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>82</td>
<td>Civil-Military Relationship and Reform in the Defence Industry</td>
<td>Arthur S Ding</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>83</td>
<td>How Bargaining Alters Outcomes: Bilateral Trade Negotiations and Bargaining Strategies</td>
<td>Deborah Elms</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>84</td>
<td>Great Powers and Southeast Asian Regional Security Strategies: Omni-enmeshment, Balancing and Hierarchical Order</td>
<td>Evelyn Goh</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>85</td>
<td>Global Jihad, Sectarianism and The Madrassahs in Pakistan</td>
<td>Ali Riaz</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>86</td>
<td>Autobiography, Politics and Ideology in Sayyid Qutb’s Reading of the Qur’an</td>
<td>Umej Bhatia</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>87</td>
<td>Maritime Disputes in the South China Sea: Strategic and Diplomatic Status Quo</td>
<td>Ralf Emmers</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Author</td>
<td>Year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---</td>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>---------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>88.</td>
<td>China’s Political Commissars and Commanders: Trends &amp; Dynamics</td>
<td>Srikanth Kondapalli</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>90.</td>
<td>Geopolitics, Grand Strategy and the Bush Doctrine</td>
<td>Simon Dalby</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>91.</td>
<td>Local Elections and Democracy in Indonesia: The Case of the Riau Archipelago</td>
<td>Nankyung Choi</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>92.</td>
<td>The Impact of RMA on Conventional Deterrence: A Theoretical Analysis</td>
<td>Manjeet Singh Pardesi</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>93.</td>
<td>Africa and the Challenge of Globalisation</td>
<td>Jeffrey Herbst</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>94.</td>
<td>The East Asian Experience: The Poverty of 'Picking Winners'</td>
<td>Barry Desker and Deborah Elms</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>95.</td>
<td>Bandung And The Political Economy Of North-South Relations: Sowing The Seeds For Revisioning International Society</td>
<td>Helen E S Nesadurai</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>96.</td>
<td>Re-conceptualising the Military-Industrial Complex: A General Systems Theory Approach</td>
<td>Adrian Kiuah</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>99.</td>
<td>Securitizing/Desecuritizing the Filipinos’ ‘Outward Migration Issue’in the Philippines’ Relations with Other Asian Governments</td>
<td>José N. Franco, Jr.</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>100.</td>
<td>Securitization Of Illegal Migration of Bangladeshis To India</td>
<td>Josy Joseph</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>102.</td>
<td>Securitizing border-crossing: The case of marginalized stateless minorities in the Thai-Burma Borderlands</td>
<td>Mika Toyota</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>104.</td>
<td>The LTTE’s Online Network and its Implications for Regional Security</td>
<td>Shyam Tekwani</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>No.</td>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Author(s)</td>
<td>Year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----</td>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>---------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>106</td>
<td>International Regime Building in Southeast Asia: ASEAN Cooperation against the Illicit Trafficking and Abuse of Drugs</td>
<td>Ralf Emmers</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>107</td>
<td>Changing Conflict Identities: The case of the Southern Thailand Discord</td>
<td>S P Harish</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 109 | TEMPORAL DOMINANCE
Military Transformation and the Time Dimension of Strategy | Edwin Seah                                                               | 2006 |
| 110 | Globalization and Military-Industrial Transformation in South Asia: An Historical Perspective | Emrys Chew                                                              | 2006 |
| 111 | UNCLOS and its Limitations as the Foundation for a Regional Maritime Security Regime | Sam Bateman                                                             | 2006 |
| 112 | Freedom and Control Networks in Military Environments | Paul T Mitchell                                                        | 2006 |
| 113 | Rewriting Indonesian History The Future in Indonesia’s Past | Kwa Chong Guan                                                          | 2006 |
| 114 | Twelver Shi’ite Islam: Conceptual and Practical Aspects | Christoph Marcinkowski                                                   | 2006 |
| 115 | Islam, State and Modernity : Muslim Political Discourse in Late 19th and Early 20th century India | Iqbal Singh Sevea                                                       | 2006 |
| 117 | “From Counter-Society to Counter-State: Jemaah Islamiyah According to PUPJI” | Elena Pavlova                                                            | 2006 |
| 118 | The Terrorist Threat to Singapore’s Land Transportation Infrastructure: A Preliminary Enquiry | Adam Dolnik                                                             | 2006 |
| 119 | The Many Faces of Political Islam | Mohammed Ayoob                                                         | 2006 |
| 120 | Facets of Shi’ite Islam in Contemporary Southeast Asia (I): Thailand and Indonesia | Christoph Marcinkowski                                                  | 2006 |
| 121 | Facets of Shi’ite Islam in Contemporary Southeast Asia (II): Malaysia and Singapore | Christoph Marcinkowski                                                   | 2006 |
| 122 | Towards a History of Malaysian Ulama | Mohamed Nawab                                                          | 2007 |
| 123 | Islam and Violence in Malaysia
Ahmad Fauzi Abdul Hamid |                                                      | 2007 |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>124.</td>
<td>Between Greater Iran and Shi’ite Crescent: Some Thoughts on the Nature of Iran’s Ambitions in the Middle East</td>
<td>Christoph Marcinkowski</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>129.</td>
<td>The De-escalation of the Spratly Dispute in Sino-Southeast Asian Relations</td>
<td>Ralf Emmers</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>130.</td>
<td>War, Peace or Neutrality: An Overview of Islamic Polity’s Basis of Inter-State Relations</td>
<td>Muhammad Haniff Hassan</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>132.</td>
<td>Comprehensive Security and Resilience in Southeast Asia: ASEAN’s Approach to Terrorism and Sea Piracy</td>
<td>Ralf Emmers</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>133.</td>
<td>The Ulama in Pakistani Politics</td>
<td>Mohamed Nawab</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>134.</td>
<td>China’s Proactive Engagement in Asia: Economics, Politics and Interactions</td>
<td>Li Mingjiang</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>135.</td>
<td>The PLA’s Role in China’s Regional Security Strategy</td>
<td>Qi Dapeng</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>136.</td>
<td>War As They Knew It: Revolutionary War and Counterinsurgency in Southeast Asia</td>
<td>Ong Wei Chong</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>137.</td>
<td>Indonesia’s Direct Local Elections: Background and Institutional Framework</td>
<td>Nankyung Choi</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>140.</td>
<td>Globalization: Implications of and for the Modern / Post-modern Navies of the Asia Pacific</td>
<td>Geoffrey Till</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>142.</td>
<td>Sulawesi: Aspirations of Local Muslims</td>
<td>Rohaiza Ahmad Asi</td>
<td>2007</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
143. Islamic Militancy, Sharia, and Democratic Consolidation in Post-Suharto Indonesia
   Noorhaidi Hasan (2007)

144. Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon: The Indian Ocean and The Maritime Balance of Power in Historical Perspective
   Emrys Chew (2007)

145. New Security Dimensions in the Asia Pacific
   Barry Desker (2007)

146. Japan’s Economic Diplomacy towards East Asia: Fragmented Realism and Naïve Liberalism
   Hidetaka Yoshimatsu (2007)

147. U.S. Primacy, Eurasia’s New Strategic Landscape, and the Emerging Asian Order
   Alexander L. Vuving (2007)

148. The Asian Financial Crisis and ASEAN’s Concept of Security
   Yongwook Ryu (2008)

149. Security in the South China Sea: China’s Balancing Act and New Regional Dynamics
   Li Mingjiang (2008)

150. The Defence Industry in the Post-Transformational World: Implications for the United States and Singapore
   Richard A Bitzinger (2008)

151. The Islamic Opposition in Malaysia: New Trajectories and Directions
   Mohamed Fauz Abdul Hamid (2008)

152. Thinking the Unthinkable: The Modernization and Reform of Islamic Higher Education in Indonesia
   Farish A Noor (2008)

153. Outlook for Malaysia’s 12th General Elections
   Mohamed Nawab Mohamed Osman, Shahirah Mahmood and Joseph Chinyong Liow (2008)

154. The use of SOLAS Ship Security Alert Systems
   Thomas Timlen (2008)

155. Thai-Chinese Relations: Security and Strategic Partnership
   Chulacheeb Chinwanno (2008)

156. Sovereignty In ASEAN and The Problem of Maritime Cooperation in the South China Sea
   JN Mak (2008)

157. Sino-U.S. Competition in Strategic Arms
   Arthur S. Ding (2008)

158. Roots of Radical Sunni Traditionalism

159. Interpreting Islam On Plural Society
   Muhammad Haniff Hassan (2008)

160. Towards a Middle Way Islam in Southeast Asia: Contributions of the Gülen Movement
   Mohamed Nawab Mohamed Osman (2008)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No.</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author(s)</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>161</td>
<td>Spoilers, Partners and Pawns: Military Organizational Behaviour and Civil-Military Relations in Indonesia</td>
<td>Evan A. Laksmana</td>
<td>2008</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>162</td>
<td>The Securitization of Human Trafficking in Indonesia</td>
<td>Rizal Sukma</td>
<td>2008</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>164</td>
<td>A Merlion at the Edge of an Afrasian Sea: Singapore’s Strategic Involvement in the Indian Ocean</td>
<td>Emrys Chew</td>
<td>2008</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>166</td>
<td>Singapore’s Sovereign Wealth Funds: The Political Risk of Overseas Investments</td>
<td>Friedrich Wu</td>
<td>2008</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>167</td>
<td>The Internet in Indonesia: Development and Impact of Radical Websites</td>
<td>Jennifer Yang Hui</td>
<td>2008</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>168</td>
<td>Beibu Gulf: Emerging Sub-regional Integration between China and ASEAN</td>
<td>Gu Xiaosong and Li Mingjiang</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>169</td>
<td>Islamic Law In Contemporary Malaysia: Prospects and Problems</td>
<td>Ahmad Fauzi Abdul Hamid</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>170</td>
<td>“Indonesia’s Salafist Sufis”</td>
<td>Julia Day Howell</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>171</td>
<td>Reviving the Caliphate in the Nusantara: Hizbut Tahrir Indonesia’s Mobilization Strategy and Its Impact in Indonesia</td>
<td>Mohamed Nawab Mohamed Osman</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>172</td>
<td>Islamizing Formal Education: Integrated Islamic School and a New Trend in Formal Education Institution in Indonesia</td>
<td>Noorhaidi Hasan</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>173</td>
<td>The Implementation of Vietnam-China Land Border Treaty: Bilateral and Regional Implications</td>
<td>Do Thi Thuy</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>174</td>
<td>The Tablighi Jama’at Movement in the Southern Provinces of Thailand Today: Networks and Modalities</td>
<td>Farish A. Noor</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>175</td>
<td>The Spread of the Tablighi Jama’at Across Western, Central and Eastern Java and the role of the Indian Muslim Diaspora</td>
<td>Farish A. Noor</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>176</td>
<td>Significance of Abu Dujana and Zarkasih’s Verdict</td>
<td>Nurfarahislinda Binte Mohamed Ismail, V. Arianti and Jennifer Yang Hui</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>No.</td>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Author(s)</td>
<td>Year</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----</td>
<td>------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>-----------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>178</td>
<td>The Capacities of Coast Guards to deal with Maritime Challenges in Southeast Asia</td>
<td>Prabhakaran Paleri</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>179</td>
<td>China and Asian Regionalism: Pragmatism Hinders Leadership</td>
<td>Li Mingiang</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>180</td>
<td>Livelihood Strategies Amongst Indigenous Peoples in the Central Cardamom Protected Forest, Cambodia</td>
<td>Long Sarou</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>181</td>
<td>Human Trafficking in Cambodia: Reintegration of the Cambodian illegal migrants from Vietnam and Thailand</td>
<td>Neth Naro</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>182</td>
<td>The Philippines as an Archipelagic and Maritime Nation: Interests, Challenges, and Perspectives</td>
<td>Mary Ann Palma</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>185</td>
<td>U.S. Foreign Policy and Southeast Asia: From Manifest Destiny to Shared Destiny</td>
<td>Emrys Chew</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>186</td>
<td>Different Lenses on the Future: U.S. and Singaporean Approaches to Strategic Planning</td>
<td>Justin Zorn</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>187</td>
<td>Converging Peril : Climate Change and Conflict in the Southern Philippines</td>
<td>J. Jackson Ewing</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>188</td>
<td>Informal Caucuses within the WTO: Singapore in the “Invisibles Group”</td>
<td>Barry Desker</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>189</td>
<td>The ASEAN Regional Forum and Preventive Diplomacy: A Failure in Practice</td>
<td>Ralf Emmers and See Seng Tan</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>190</td>
<td>How Geography Makes Democracy Work</td>
<td>Richard W. Carney</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>191</td>
<td>The Arrival and Spread of the Tablighi Jama’at In West Papua (Irian Jaya), Indonesia</td>
<td>Farish A. Noor</td>
<td>2010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>192</td>
<td>The Korean Peninsula in China’s Grand Strategy: China’s Role in dealing with North Korea’s Nuclear Quandary</td>
<td>Chung Chong Wook</td>
<td>2010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>193</td>
<td>Asian Regionalism and US Policy: The Case for Creative Adaptation</td>
<td>Donald K. Emmerson</td>
<td>2010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>194</td>
<td>Jemaah Islamiyah:Of Kin and Kind</td>
<td>Sulastri Osman</td>
<td>2010</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>